Spies

Red News' own spies have dug up some background information on the hapless AGM infiltrators who asked odd questions from a pre-prepared list. A couple of them are said to run "Spy Tours" around London looking at secret sights associated with spying – not very secret if a tour company knows them. Also on the undercover theme, Andy Terrington who asked if anyone on the board has a conscience turns out to be a TV producer who worked on the C4 series, Sleepers. This involved reporters going undercover to expose the sex trade, racists and the black economy. Terrington is also probably responsible for a website called "Clean up Football" which has only one page asking for e-mails about sleaze in football – trawling for info on Fergie perhaps?

The other man involved was Rupert Harris and if you put that name into an Internet search engine it brings up the profile of TV producer. Taylor Goodman, the woman who asked about Duff and Ronaldinho is variously described as an actress or an undercover agent with an intelligence agency and we've been told the questioner who kept her identity secret is also an actress. Seems to be a bit of a theme and TV is a good cover for investigation. RN has the name of yet another TV producer who was at the AGM and can be linked to Terrington.

This was not a cheap venture, so was it funded by Kroll who've been hired by the horse traders to dig dirt on Fergie? All flew up from London and stayed at a top class hotel, plus they had to become shareholders to get in to the AGM. They appear to have bought about 100 shares each. Shame! For £10 they could have joined Shareholders United.

Barney – for info the other TV producer's name is Ben Hamilton, but I didn't want to name him as this is second hand info.
